Lynn Sage Funds Two Fellowships in Response to Breast Imaging Shortage

In the United States there is a shortage of radiologists. According to a report by the Institute of Medicine, increased demand for imaging services is outracing the number of new radiologists. The shortage of radiologists who have advanced training in reading mammograms has had a significant impact on Northwestern Memorial Hospital’s Lynn Sage Comprehensive Breast Center. In a letter to the women of Chicago that was published in the November 25, 2008 Chicago Tribune, Dean Harrison, President and Chief Executive Officer of Northwestern Memorial HealthCare, stated that a shortage in breast imagers had led to a decline in the number of mammograms per day from 250 to 170. Fortunately, an intensive search by Northwestern Memorial to recruit qualified radiologists has yielded three highly trained fellows to start this summer.

Driven by a desire to be a part of the solution, the Lynn Sage Cancer Research Foundation has made a gift to Northwestern Memorial to support two new fellowships in breast imaging for the coming year. These fellowships will provide two radiologists with the specialized training they need to provide expert radiology services to patients of the breast center. “As part of our educational mission, we fund fellowships in several disciplines that detect and treat breast cancer. It is a long-term way to help alleviate the shortage of breast imagers in the United States,” said Linda Weinstein, chair of the Foundation. “By increasing the number of experts, every one of our donors can now feel a part of the larger solution.”

A Message from the CHAIRMAN

Dear Friends:

Welcome to the spring 2009 edition of the Lynn Sage Research Foundation’s newsletter. As chair of the board, it is my pleasure to share with you some of the wonderful results of our fundraising efforts, made possible by you, our valued friends and partners. We hope that this issue will inform and inspire you to continue your partnership in our fight against breast cancer.

We are pleased to report that, in 2008, your support enabled the Lynn Sage Research Foundation to raise nearly $12 million. Additionally, we have successfully held our operating costs below six percent, which enables more funds to directly support important research. That work has continued during the past year, with the foundation funding two world-class scientists for both positions to enhance and expand the breast cancer research endeavors on behalf of patients with breast cancer.

In addition, we have partnered with Dominick’s/Safeway to fund two scholars in the areas of imaging and pathology research. The Lynn Cancer Center is actively recruiting for both positions to ensure and expand the breast cancer research program at Northwestern.

We would also like to thank Canzon Pete Scott for their support of the Mother’s Day Toy Trunk, which raised over $30,000 for Breast Cancer Research. Through this program, Canzon has donated $1.2 million to the Lynn Sage Research Foundation over the past decade.

Without your commitment to our foundation’s mission, we would not be where we are today. We sincerely thank you for your generosity, which inspires us to dream bigger and aim higher in our efforts on behalf of patients with breast cancer.

Thank you for your support.
